

CHECKLIST

SETTING BOUNDARIES

NOTES

Set boundaries with your ex-partner.

- Open a new email account just for communication with your ex-partner. For more tips on email, see our Tip sheet: Managing electronic communication with an abusive ex-partner.
- Adjust Facebook and social media site settings to ensure privacy. Consider who is on your “friends” list or can access your social media postings to ensure that no one will pass on sensitive information. For more tips on managing technology abuse, see our Tip sheet: Safer use of technology.
- Be clear and direct with your ex-partner about behaviour that is unacceptable. Keep a written record of all communication so that if he continues you can take action by involving authorities.
- Try to get an order that is as specific as possible about all aspects of contact with the children: when it is permitted, by telephone, how exchanges are to be handled, etc. The more specific the order, the less chance there is for your ex-partner to manipulate arrangements.
- Monitor the children’s phone/email/text/social media contact with their father and end exchanges that become inappropriate (for example, if their father begins questioning the children about you, sharing inappropriate information about your case, etc.). Remember to document these instances.
- Have caller ID installed so you can screen calls and only answer calls from your ex-partner when the children are available to talk to him.
- Limit what can be spoken about when the children have phone calls with their father, and end the call if it becomes intrusive or abusive.
- Do not respond to every text, phone call or email immediately. Most responses can wait 24 hours if it is not an emergency. This will give you time to plan your response and help you to set boundaries with your ex-partner.
- If telephone contact becomes challenging, limit contact to email or a co-parenting website. This creates a record of your exchanges.
- Arrange exchanges of the children away from your home and in public places like the children’s school or daycare.
- Resist the temptation to spend special occasions such as children’s birthdays and cultural/religious celebrations with their father. Even if the children appear to want this to happen, they can learn the advantages of being able to celebrate these events separately with each of you.
- Let him receive information about the children’s health, education and general welfare directly from the children’s care providers.
- Limit contact with former in-laws and family members who behave in an abusive or disrespectful manner. Anyone from your ex-partner’s family who wishes to spend time with the children can negotiate this with him.

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---